Pulsed Magnetic Fields Give Injury Recovery Edge to Athletes

market WIRE

Updated: 10:00 a.m. ET Oct. 19, 2004

DES PLAINES, IL - With the 2004 RE/MAX World Long Drive Golf Finals taking place October 19-23rd in Mesquite, Nevada, the finalists have their sights set squarely on keeping injury at bay. Senior division contender John Slawinski has resolved a history of carpal tunnel, low back pain and a strained rotator cuff with a cutting edge bio-energetic health technology Magnopro, www.omtusa.com. This edge is taking John to the finals with a club head speed increase from 125 to 140 miles per hour!

Since finding the Magnopro pulsed magnetic mat, John's pleasant surprise has been relief from body aches, less recovery time, more flexibility, enhanced sports performance, as well as better digestion, elimination, and a sound night's sleep.

"Now, I depend on pulsed magnetic fields for recovery and to help increase my sports performance. The Magnopro pulsed magnetic mat and pillow has become a daily habit for me and I will rely on the system during the LDA finals," says John.

John and other top long drivers can be seen in action on ESPN2, as the world's longest driver finalists play in Mesquite, Nevada for the World Championship, Oct. 19-23rd. Check www.longdrivers.com and your local listings for televised times of the LDA tour.

Pulsed electromagnetic fields, PEMFs, are different from the magnets with which we all have experimented with trying to relieve pain in our wrists and backs. A pulsed magnetic field balances the electromagnetic systems of the body thus influencing the body to resolve health issues naturally. PEMFs influence cellular metabolism just by lying down on a mat for minutes a day, with the simple push of a button. Though backed by 30 years of solid European research, the pioneering of pulsed magnetic fields has just begun in the United States.
